ABOUT THE STATE.

Items of Interest Gleaned from Our Exchanges.

John G. Shedd, who it is said will become the head of the great business of the late Marshall Field, was a Rutland boy, having started his business life as a clerk in the store of which Benjamin H. Burt was proprietor.

Mrs. Addie Kellogg of Vergennes, widow of Wesley Kellogg, was found dead on the floor of her sleeping apartment Tuesday morning. Drs. F. C. Phelps and Vance Waterman were summoned and decided that death was due to heart failure. Mrs. Kellogg was 61 years of age and had been in poor health for some time.

The report of the Rutland public school superintendent brings to light the fact that the cost of educating the children of Rutland in 1905 was $25.31 per child. This is 61 cents a pupil more than in 1904. The report shows that there are 3,855 school children in the city which is 35 more than in the former year. There were 33 school rooms in the district in 1904 and 36 teachers.

Dr. C. M. Ferrin, health officer of the town of Essex, reports that of the 38 deaths reported to him in the past year there were of tuberculosis, 5; pneumonia, 3; cancer, 3; disease of the heart, 7; apoplexy, 2; accident, 2; and one each of several other diseases. There were about 125 cases of measles during the year and two cases of diphtheria but no deaths from those diseases.

The Rutland News is authority for the following statement: "The city of Rutland saved during the year 1905 about $2,000 over and above expenses. This was made public at a meeting of the board of aldermen Monday evening, when a resolution was introduced for first reading which provided for the transfer of $6,500 from the receipts of the year to the credit of the sinking fund."

BISHOP HALL SPOKE.

Addressed University of Vermont Students on Higher Education. Nearly 400 students of the University of Vermont, of the faculty and alumni, attended the vesper service in the college chapel Wednesday afternoon, when the Rt. Rev. A. C. Hall, bishop of Vermont, made an address on "The Higher Education."

"The higher education, the training of man's morals and religious qualities is a matter largely of self training. The university surrounds its students with a healthy moral atmosphere, but very largely his morals and religious development must be the student's own doing. To produce a well rounded man is the function of education. Herbert Spencer has said: 'To train us for complete living is the function of education.'"

"The university looks after the training of the man physically. In spite of the athletic craze, and I honestly believe it to be not much more than a craze, the university strives to send forth her students as highly trained animals. This is all very well, but man is something more than an animal. The well trained man is feared far more in a university like this, with every method urged for mental development, the danger of our coming to think there is nothing higher or beyond mental development."

"The heart and the conscience keep the head steady many times, and the heart, conscience and moral sense need cultivation. Intellect by itself, cold, keen, remorseless, is sometimes unscrupulous, and may be used for selfish purposes or in the defense of the fallacious. 'Something must keep the intellect straight and right. You must listen to the voice of conscience.' Not the voice and conscience according to the negro's definition of the voice within that says, 'I won't,' but the voice that says sternly and distinctly, 'you mustn't.'"

"And this is what makes the true gentleman—not the man of idleness, of bank account, or ancestry, but the man of courage supported by reason and self control."

"And therefore we must, in order to gain the higher education, discipline ourselves—about food, sleep, exercise, and things which are trivial in themselves, so that by conquering them we may gain the power to conquer and have ourselves well in hand when some sweeping temptation comes along which we would otherwise be unable to stand against."

"We should make more simple rules to govern ourselves in regard to irreverence, profanity, amusements, and indulgence, so that we will not be lowered by our surroundings. Every one living in college is either purifying the college atmosphere or is contaminating it."

The Best Way to Rise in the World. Young men are always being advised to "rise in the world." Which may or may not be good advice. It depends upon: How the young man rises. What he rises upon. What he takes up with him. If your idea is to rise in the world by making money and having people look up to you on that account it is easy enough.

If you want to go up like a man, however, put some foundation besides dollars under you. What will you rise to? To something worth while. Ideals are worth while, and one way to define ideals is to say they are what your mother wants you to be. When men go up to ideals they are the light of the world.—Chicago Journal.

Friend—What do you think of that Jigar I gave you? It's a "Colonel," you know. Tommy—Well, how appropriate! There's something about this cigar that is suggestive of a colonel. Friend—What's that? Tommy—It's rank.—Scraps.

Jack—Hollo, Fred! Had your hair cut? Fred—Yes, did. I found a place where they cut your hair like you want. Jack—That's good. A barber's shop is usually a place where they cut some other man's hair while you wait.

Warden to newly arrived convict—In this institution we try to put a man to work at his own trade or profession, so that he can work his way up. What is your occupation? Convict—I'm an aeroplane.

"Butting In."

"It is all right, my boy, to have just loads of fun at the expense of the people who 'butt in'; but I have noticed that the ones who butt in are the ones who are most likely to make a winning in this queer game of life—those who butt in the most and hardest. They may receive many a snub which would crush a man or woman of finer sensibilities; but, bless their pachydermatous hides, they do not feel it, and, like the immortal flea, they 'get there just the same.' I know artists, litterateurs, musicians and that ilk; in plenty, who owe one-third of their evident success to natural talent in their profession, and the other two-thirds to a high genius for butting in—butting into society, when it does not want them; art circles, when they are not invited; the swim' when anybody else would see and heed the sign, 'No trespassers' on the bank of the pool. Men butt into business circles, and the first thing you know you hear them mentioned as 'merchant princes.'"

And so you will see the big game being played wherever you may turn your eyes. Don't take my word for it, my boy. Look about you and see if I am right; and if I am, then off with your hat and join with me in one jubilant hurrah for the man, or woman, who gets there by butting in! You may not respect them any more than I do, but the laurel that the world-tenders to success, however won, is on their brow; and so—say!—San Francisco Call.
